The requested funding will support study, planning, and construction of improvements to an existing, underutilized regional stormwater detention basin in the City of Troy, resulting in approximately 33 million gallons of stormwater capacity. The project will launch an innovative stormwater detention credit program that provides a practical, compliant alternative to waivers to stormwater standards where on-site detention is not feasible. By detaining runoff within the watershed scale, the basin will provide a regional benefit by providing flood control, reducing erosion, and stabilizing flashy flows affecting communities throughout the Clinton River watershed. This spending item provides a clear public benefit by improving regional flood control, protecting infrastructure, and reducing long-term public costs associated with storm damage and emergency response. It also establishes a self-sustaining stormwater management model that enhances regulatory compliance while delivering measurable environmental and public safety benefits, making it an appropriate and responsible use of taxpayer funds.
